Message:

I find it really baffling that Travis County is divided up into 5 congressional districts. My district extends roughly 150 miles west from where I live, yet it doesn't include other parts of Austin that are just a few miles away. I suspect my interests as a constituent are far more closely aligned with my fellow Austinites than with people who live out in Real County. Most congressional districts in Texas seem to be divided into reasonable squares, so I can't think of any fair and non-partisan reason why the same isn't true for my district.
