I had pretty low expectations for the Texas Legislature's redistricting process, but I am absolutely appalled at the audacity of the shameless politicians who are trying to carve out the bottom of my county, in such an obvious and pathetic attempt at gerrymandering. You may feel pretty comfortable with the fact that you can hand-pick your voters, but anyone with a functioning brain can see how much of a loser's strategy the Republican agenda has sunken to.

You have NOTHING to offer for your voters, so you have to divide and control to cling to power. You may also think people don't realize how you're even getting ready to try to invalidate the results of any election that you lose (or the complete irony of considering your OWN elections fraudulent), but like most things, you're too pea-brained to see beyond the short term. Instead of using the census as a cheap tool to stack your odds, maybe you should stop and think about the millions of new people who are moving to your state with fresh perspectives, who are likely reminding the unfortunate people around them who have had to live under your BS policies for years how much better they could have it.
