Message:

Redistricting TX's congressional maps is a wasteful endeavor at this time. It is mid-decade, meaning it will have to be done again after the next census and the lawsuit over the current racially gerrymandered maps is not settled, meaning it will likely have to be done again to be in compliance with the Voting Rights Act. The representatives of this state should actually represent the population they serve so when there are 8 million registered democrats and only 6.5 million registered republicans, I'd say the maps are already a bit skewed. TX ain't red, y'all. It's purple.
