Message:

I'm writing today to express my deep opposition to the latest redistricting efforts being pushed in Texas. Let's be honest: this isn't about fair representation, it's about political manipulation—plain and simple. It's not what Texans asked for, and it's certainly not what we hired you to do.

This is exactly what Donald Trump wants. Not what your constituents want. Not what your neighbors want. Not what real Texans want. We're not here to be pawns in a political game designed to tip the scales in Washington.

Texas is an at-will employment state. That means we have every right—and frankly, every intention—to fire you if you don't do your job. And your job is to represent us, not to cave to the demands of a man who's spent his career bulldozing people to get his way.

You should be embarrassed. Texans don't take orders from bullies. We are the bold ones. We're known for independence, courage, and standing up for what's right—even when it's hard. That legacy matters. Don't sell it out for short-term political gain.

Texas is known for doing things big. Big ideas. Big risks. Big integrity. If you're going to put our name on a national embarrassment, you better believe we'll put your name on a pink slip in return.

Do the right thing. Reject partisan redistricting. Listen to your constituents. Or don't be surprised when we find someone who will.
