Message:

I'm submitting this comment in my personal capacity as a concerned citizen and advocate for fair representation.

It is deeply troubling to witness a pattern where four Black legislators who represent predominantly Black communities are being targeted—and three of them are under direct attack. This is not only disproportionate, but it raises serious concerns about racial bias and discrimination in the redistricting process.

Redistricting should be about ensuring fair and equal representation for all communities, not undermining the voices of historically marginalized groups. To single out districts that are led by Black elected officials—especially in communities where Black residents make up a significant portion of the population—is not only unfair, but it also sends a dangerous message about whose voices are valued in our democracy.

We should be moving toward more diversity and inclusion in government, not less. The goal should be equitable representation that reflects the people, not racial or political manipulation of maps to silence them.

I urge lawmakers to reconsider any action that dilutes Black political power or targets Black-led districts.

Redistricting must be a transparent, just process rooted in equality—not discrimination.

Thank you for your time and consideration.
