Message:

The recent redistricting efforts in Texas represent a blatant attempt to undermine fair representation and weaken the voices of communities of color. Despite the state's rapid demographic growth—particularly among Latino, Black, and Asian populations—the new district maps fail to reflect this reality, instead reinforcing partisan power and diluting minority voting strength.

Redistricting should be a transparent, equitable process grounded in the principles of democracy, not a political weapon used to manipulate outcomes and silence dissent. When district lines are drawn to favor one party or diminish the influence of certain communities, it erodes public trust in our institutions and violates the foundational principle of “one person, one vote.”

I stand firmly against these discriminatory redistricting practices. All Texans, regardless of race, background, or political affiliation, deserve fair representation in government. We call for maps that reflect the true diversity of our state and uphold the rights of every voter.
